

Accreditation Commission For Homeopathic Education in North America (ACEHNA)

To Sponsors of Homeopathic Seminars and Conferences,

The Accreditation Commission for Homeopathic Education in North America (ACHENA) invites you to participate in a process of improving and assuring the quality of homeopathic education in North America, goals we know you share. We want to familiarize you with the ACHENA and how, in cooperation with the certification boards and community of homeopathic educators, we seek to move closer to achieving these goals.

ACHENA asks you to become an accredited sponsor of homeopathic seminars and conferences. As a sponsor, the education programs you offer will be accredited by ACHENA for Certified Homeopathic Education Units (CHEU). Your students will use these hours of education toward their requirements for initial or continued professional certification.

Accreditation of continuing education by ACHENA is currently required by the American Board of Homeotherapeutics (ABHt) to meet its annual continuing education requirements for certified practitioners. In the future all other homeopathic credentialing institutions may phase in this requirement. These certification organizations include the Council for Homeopathic Certification (CHC), the North American Society of Homeopaths (NASH), and the Homeopathic Academy of Naturopathic Physicians (HANP).

ACHENA accreditation of continuing education is applicable to each seminar or conference. The cost of accreditation is $5 per hour of teaching. For example, an average seminar day is eight hours, inclusive of lunch and short breaks. For a two-day seminar, the 6 to 6.5 hours per day dedicated to teaching would generate a fee of $60 or $65.

ACHENA works with other North American homeopathic organizations to demonstrate to the larger health care and educational communities that our sponsors meet the highest standards for continuing education. We hope you will join us, the practitioner-certification institutions, and other educators in this effort.
